GARRY MCBRIDE OF EVANS CONCRETE INVITED TO OLYMPIC COUNT DOWN

With the count down already started for the 2012 Olympics Games which get underway in just two years time, the chief executive of one Derbyshire company was thrilled to be invited to the Olympic site to see how work is progressing.

Garry McBride of Evans Concrete was on site at the invitation of BBC Radio 5 live who wanted to interview him about the work that his company has been carrying out for the Olympics. He was in good company too, rubbing shoulders with former Olympic greats Lord Coe, Tesss Sanderson, Matthew Pinsent and Sally Gunnell as well as the Mayor of London Boris Johnson and chairman of the Olympic Delivery Authority John Armitt.

“It was simply breathtaking to see the Olympic site taking shape and also wonderful to meet such personalities from the sporting world,” said Garry. “To think that Evans Concrete is playing a small part in helping to deliver great facilities for such a prestigious sporting event in which top class athletes from all of over the world will be competing, is just amazing.”
