

BRETT ACHIEVES INTERNATIONAL MANAGEMENT ACCREDITATION

Brett Landscaping is celebrating after its Pocklington site was awarded internationally recognised accreditation for quality management systems, environmental management systems, and occupational health and safety management systems.

The company's Pocklington site in North Yorkshire has been successfully audited externally and has gained accreditation for ISO 9001:2000 (quality management systems), ISO 14001 (environmental management systems) and OHSAS18001 (occupational health and safety management systems).

The Pocklington site is responsible for manufacture of the company's range of premium garden landscaping products, and is the second Brett Landscaping site to successfully achieve accreditation after the company's Poole site in Dorset celebrated last summer.

The ISO standards are maintained by the International Organisation for Standardisation. ISO 9001:2000 is a set of procedures that cover all key processes, monitoring them to ensure effectiveness and facilitating continuous improvement. ISO 14001 requires an environmental policy to be in place, determining impacts and sets objectives for improvement.

Speaking about the success, Chris Droogan, Managing Director of Brett Landscaping said; "Brett is a company which takes its responsibilities to its customers, its staff and the environment seriously. By securing this key integrated accreditation we are demonstrating that our standards are the highest and we are continually striving to improve the company, our offer and the entire Brett experience, both internally and externally.

"We are delighted with the efforts of the staff at Pocklington. This is a great achievement and they should rightly be proud of themselves."
